

To Whom It May Concern,

It has come to my attention that some entity is trying to stop yet another technology from getting a foothold on our daily lives. Thank God! By all means, look at where all this technology has gotten us. May we all burn in Hell. Seriously, first we start out with fire and now look at us...shooting rockets into outer space, to the Moon and maybe Mars??? and putting satellites out there to send digital signals to gas powered motor vehicles. Where is the damn horse and buggy anyway? Too much progress I say! Next thing you know, they will be replacing movie actors with computer generated characters! Stop the nonsense now before it gets out of control. Hell, next time I vote for a public official they may have me using some kind of computer instead of those 'tried and true' punch cards. No, you keep people from expanding technology for as long as you can. Someone should have shot that Bell character long before he invented that damn telephone. Nothing but trouble with a capital 'T'. Personally, I think the government should have stayed out of it and let that Bell company alone. If you can keep a monopoly alive, then there is no need for real innovation and technology can go the way of the dinosaur, which is what really should happen in the first place.

Thanks for listening and apologies for any spelling errors as this web site doesn't have spell checking.